

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

November 3, 2018

Dear gentlemen,

I write in response to the coup attempt taking place.

On the 24th September I was elected to be the 24th President of the United States. The campaign was a true journey - one which I enjoyed in spirit and relished in victory when it was over. It is my belief that people don't properly understand the duty of the President. I am not the micromanaging, stuck-up moron at walmart who wants to meet sales quotas so I can get a payrise.

When I chose my staff members, I chose people that I believed to be independent. People who would have a task and perform it to the best of their ability: raising concerns through the hierarchy where applicable but having mostly free rein to do whatever they please. I hoped that this created a sense of freedom whereby members of my staff could make choices based off their expertise, and not my personal intervention. With that came an understanding that I was always there for you. I said in my first cabinet meeting and I quote - "I have your backs until the very end."

It's true, I fought harder than some of you understand during the confirmation process and every time an issue has actually been presented to me I have done my utmost to create a resolution that is fair and just. Whilst you may not agree with a choice I've made, it was myself that the American people chose.

I'm not superman however, and there are some issues plaguing this country that are entirely out of our control. You've probably noticed that every Presidency since Gatsby one year ago has been like playing the same Youtube video on loop. The common denominator is not President nor party: it's ownership and funding.

Accept it or not, this place is neglected by the people that own it. The Founder expects us to speak to the Group Managers who are absent for days on end and even then - when the OMB Director asks for the budget to be distributed - get ignored.

We are not “doing nothing,” and 7 days of quietness - not inactivity as the Vice President so gracelessly calls it - does not render me unable to perform my duties. Using the lack of nominations/announcements as a means to justify said “inactivity” is just stupid, because if I’m doing my job right - I shouldn’t have to be nominating anyone at all because the positions would be filled.

But I’ve tried to fill the vacancies we have: since delivering the State of the Union I’ve made numerous attempts across discord to hire people. But the problem comes down to one thing: there is nobody applying. Scratch that, there is nobody fit nor qualified applying. Even if we are desperate, I won’t appoint retards to my staff. You can take a look at the Gatsby administration for a model of why that won’t work.

The reason there is nobody? There are 2, very simple.

First, and I hate to be so blunt, DC is fucking shit. I walked to my local graveyard to visit a deceased distant relative earlier this month, and I can safely say I had more entertainment in that than I get by going to DC. There is fuckshit all to do. It’s like going to gym class but you just stand in an empty gym.

The bank is the only actually interactive part of DC and it doesn’t even work lol. Why is DC so shit? Because we don’t have the developers to make it work, and we don’t have the money to pay third party developers to do it for us. I already sent my bank into overdraft paying for a sponsorship at DC during the SOTU, there’s only so much I can do.

The second reason: we can’t afford adverts! Not that adverts really give us anything apart from the slightly more unintelligent population. This whole community is dying. NUSA ended up with like 70-80 votes in a congressional election. They normally average about 200.

So, forgive me for thinking the Vice President is a bit of a snake. The one time he actually came to me with his concerns was 6PM last night. By midnight he was already trying to coup me. When he did come to me with his concerns. He was unable to actually say anything he would do differently. I told him I’m all ears to his suggestions. His first suggestion -- “Army,” a truly constructive and well formulated idea. After being prompted, he added “review it all.” Alright Mr. Vice President, the review is complete. The Army needs more members. See paragraphs above.

Second “FBI, justice.” After I responded pointing out that the reason the FBI and DoJ are unable to function is because DC is shit, he blamed it on the department heads (probably the same ones he was begging for your signatures too, keep that in mind).

He then said “The executive needs to seem more active to even begin becoming active.” To which I pointed out the statistic that our 28 server startups in 31 days (of which 22 were hosted by myself, for your information.) He ended up going on a tangent about speaking to the Group Managers which I addressed earlier and then made the point that I don’t give updates.

So, when the clock strikes 11PM and I have it on good authority that the Vice President, who spent the best part of half a month pretending to be Cookie Monster and putting shame on the Executive Office he holds thinks I’m unable to discharge the duties of President, I’m the furthest thing from surprised there can be. The irony.

I don’t regret choosing you. I don’t regret any of my choices. But if I could go back and change one thing, in hindsight, I’d pick somebody who wouldn’t get a lust for power and try to insult our constitution like that to be Vice President.

If you read every word of this and are still adamant I’m not fit to be President, then I’m sorry. Not sorry for choosing you, and not sorry for giving you the office you hold right now despite not being obliged to. Sorry you felt that things were in such a dire state that you felt the need to replace a consistent, open and devoted leader with a fucking retard. That’s what this is about - it’s not about removing me - it’s about the Vice President promoting himself.

Sincerely yours,

24th President of the United States
